Internet Waiver

Dear Artemis parent or guardian:

As you know, your child will be participating in a five-week program that will teach her many computer-related skills. Her learning will require her to use internet and e-mail. Because these services give students free access to all the information people around the world choose to share, and because this information may include material inappropriate for the students under 18, Brown University requires permission from you to allow your student to access these services:

The Internet and the World Wide Web (the Web) are worldwide networks of computers and interconnected information.

Email stands for electronic mail, by which people anywhere in the world can write a letter using a computer and send it to any other person in the world.

The coordinators, Paige, Amanda, Nellie, Jordan, and Shreena, will be sure to select only appropriate material for the girls to work with and do their best to keep surveillance on the Web sites to which the girls may be exposed. Email accounts through the computer science department will be provided to the students, and email will be exchanged only between the members of the Artemis Project and select Brown University students involved in the sciences.

Below is a disclaimer from Brown University explaining in greater detail its policy on free access to the Internet. Please read it carefully before you sign this form.

'...Internet lists, conferences and Web sites may contain material which individuals find objectionable, including comments which are profane, obscene, racist, sexist or otherwise offensive. Brown University takes no responsibility for the content of these entries and has consciously decided not to censor any of these postings entered by individuals. Please be aware of the potentially offensive material found in these archives and recognize that Brown neither assumes responsibility for, nor endorses, any of the content found within. Brown does not monitor Internet activity in any way.'

If you have any questions, email artemis@cs.brown.edu or call the Artemis cell phone at 617-784-8848.

I, _____ (Parent/Guardian Name), give permission for my daughter, _____, to have open access to e-mail and the Web.
